Effect of Wasp Considered

Effect on both officers and men of the ship's presence in the active list is something that the navy department probably would take into consideration. The psychological impulse from her would be bad; she would remain a "hoodoo" throughout, and this without considering that the cost of repairing her probably would be very great, and possibly more than would be justified.

Charles Harris Wells was a machinist's mate, second class. His next of kin was Miss Elizabeth M. Wells, designated "friend" in the records of the Alert, but probably a sister. Her address was given as 522 West Twenty second street, Norfolk, Virginia. Wells enlisted July 25, 1903, and he was thirty four years old.

Besides the notebook, which was Wells' own, and contained no entries at all relative to the loss of the submarine, there were some fishhooks in the pocket of his jacket, and, when found, men of the flotilla recalled that Wells had been fishing at Pearl Harbor March 24, the day before the boat was lost.

Clever Identification

Identification of Frank Nephi Her zog was eleverly done by Dr. William Seaman of the naval station and Dr. W. A. Cress of the Alert. Dental records of the Alert showed that he had two lower molars yone, and he was the ing, so this was conclusive.
